A company is running multiple AWS Lambda functions in a non-VPC environment. Most of the functions are application-specific; an operational function is involved synchronously every hour. Recently, the Applications team deployed new functions that are triggered based on an Amazon S3 event to process multiple files that are uploaded to an S3 bucket simultaneously. The SysOps Administrator notices that the operational function occasionally fails to execute due to throttling.

What step should the Administrator take to make sure that the operational function executes?

- A. Increase the operational function timeout.
- B. Increase the operational function memory.
- C. Redeploy the operational function to a VPC.
- D. Set the operational function concurrency to 1.

Answer: D

Explanation:

<https://aws.amazon.com/premiumsupport/knowledge-center/lambda-troubleshoot-throttling/> Verify if you've configured reserved concurrency on your Lambda function. Check the setting using the Lambda console, or by calling the GetFunction API.

Note: If a function is configured to have zero reserved concurrency, then the function is throttled because it can't process any events. Be sure to increase the value to a number greater than zero.
